Ald Warner, nominee for sheriff is doing some talk busting about the county and if Mr. Warner does not carry the election it will surely not be his fault. Miss Amy, the devoted daughter of Mrs. C. A. Perry, departed this life on Friday night, Oct. 21st, 1892, after a long illness of consumption. She was confined to her bed for ten weeks, during which period she experienced extreme weakness and suffering, which she endured with remarkable patience and cheerful submission. She was born August 21st, 1869, at Clinton, Lenawee county, Mich. She moved to Mason when about three years old, where she became widely known and greatly beloved. She joined the Presbyterian church about ten years ago, and for about seven years acted as organist and was always willing to undertake more christian work than her strength would warrant. The funeral service was conducted at the house by Rev. J. A. Barnes of Allegan, assisted by Revs. Jay Clizbee and Napoleon Smith. The large attendance and the profuse supply of flowers indicate the tender regard in which she was held. The interment took place at the cemetery on Monday afternoon, Oct. 24th. The pastor of the Baptist church spoke at some length of the departed, on Sunday morning, he having visited her while the Presbyterians were without a minister.

Our Celebration.
The Columbian quadricentennial celebration proved a glorious one. Not only at Chicago but at every district throughout the world, and city throughout our land cheers and National anthems rent the air while flying flags and folds of floating color lent beauty and grace to the day. The papers came to us laden with the patriotic intelligence of parades and flag raisings, speeches and pageants all in honor of the memory of that adventurous Genoese who stumbled upon a continent and died ignorant of his glorious achievement.

Mason was not behind in spirit nor patriotism. Her flags floated to the music of the hymns and the strains of our national anthems and streets were gay with the red, white and blue. In deference to the wishes of the country schools the formalities were postponed until afternoon that they might join the city schools. The time was improved by the business men and others in hanging out their decorations.

The city schools assembled in their respective rooms at one o'clock and from that time to one-thirty the district schools arrived and were assigned places to join in the exercises and positions for the parade.

Promptly at half-past one the pupils marched from the building by departments and with military precision formed in a semi-circle in front of the building. Supt. McKone as master of ceremonies called the large assembly to order and announced the reading of the president's and governor's proclamations by Mr. Bert True and Miss Mabel May respectively. A signal from Commander of the Post Adams the flag was raised and three royal cheers given by the assembly, led by Comrade Hawley. The schools then with uplifted hands saluted the flag and pronounced, "I pledge allegiance to my flag and the republic for which it stands; one nation indivisible with liberty and justice for all."

The procession was then formed in the following order: G. A. B. Post, pupils of the city schools, city band and pupils of the district schools. The following district schools were in line: District No. 1, Bunkerhill and Leslie, 35 pupils, Roy J. Robb, teacher; Dist. No. 8, Alameda, 13 pupils, Alice Aseline, teacher; Dist. No. 2, Alameda, 15 pupils, Almada Park, teacher; Dist. No. 5, Vevay, 24 pupils, Cora Clark, teacher; Dist. No. 4, Vevay, 24 pupils, Myra Wood, teacher; Dist. No. 6, Vevay, 12 pupils, Mattie Jewett, teacher; Dist. No. 7, Vevay, 75 pupils, Metta Blunt, teacher; Dist. No. 9, Vevay, 16 pupils, Cora Gregory, teacher. The line of march was as given last week. Nearly every school carried a flag or banner with appropriate motto. The high school emblem was a reproduction of the old fashioned log school house carried on the shoulders of four of the boys. The march was neatly executed and the line came down Main street with the step and bearing of veterans.

The opera house was entirely inadequate to accommodate the vast crowd, but perfect good feeling prevailed and the aisles were filled with patient people who stood the program out which was given essentially as published.

The high school and eighth grade gave a very popular entertainment, at the opera house in the evening to a large crowd. The drama "Columbus Day" was given by characters representing the Muses, Graces and Spirits, with Miss Nannie Tripp as "Columbia."

The acts of the drama were interspersed with a number of beautiful and striking tableaux emblematic of scenes and incidents of Columbus' life. The drama will be given by the high school and eighth grade in perfect in execution and exceedingly pleasant in effect. The entertainment netted over $80 for the piano.

John E. Runsbury of Aitchison, Kansas, will hold a free thought meeting at Leslie next Sunday afternoon and evening.

Married, by Rev. W. J. Maybee, at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Whiting of this city, Oct. 26th, Mr. Albert Bowen of Cheboygan, and Miss Leola J. Whiting. The newly wedded pair left on the evening train for northern Michigan.

A WOMAN'S INFLUENCE

By LULU JAMISON

The next morning Margaret received a note from the rectory asking her to come to Mrs. Ivens, who was very sick. Waiting only for a hasty breakfast, and obeying Brian's instructions to wrap herself warmly, she departed on her errand of mercy.

Through the peaceful quiet of the Sabbath morning she made her way over the well kept road, until she reached the rectory, an unpretentious little house, sitting back in an equally unpretentious garden.

A narrow, beaten pathway led to the modest entrance, and on either side of it were tiny borders of dead flowers, around whose lifeless stems the brown leaves clung convulsively.

Margaret's ring was answered by a tired-looking maid servant, who led the way into the poorly furnished little parlor. While she questioned the girl as to her mistress' condition Margaret's eyes traveled wistfully about the room, whose cheery homeliness not even the disinfecting influence of poverty could entirely dispel.

Yet there was something vaguely pathetic in the worn chairs, the faded, almost threadbare carpets, the few inexpensive ornaments, and the numerous makeshifts; little pretensions to comfort and luxury, which deft fingers had fashioned into a sort of makeshift comfort.

With these abrupt words, she started to move away, but her tears blinded her, and she would have fallen had not Brian, quick to detect her weakness, caught her in his arms.

"This will not do, Margaret," he said, with some authority. "I think you had better go home with me. You will make yourself ill."

"What nonsense, Brian! I am not watching a few hours with a sick friend? I wouldn't be fit to live if that were the case. This is not physical weakness."

"Aren't there others to do for Mrs. Ivens?" he asked, with some warmth. "Why should it all fall on your shoulders?"

"All fall on my shoulders? Oh, Brian, how you do exaggerate! Of course there are others. Plenty of them. Everybody loves her, but for some reason she likes to have me with her. And with her I intend to stay."

"Then stay you may," he answered, meeting her defiant eye. "I shan't carry you away by bodily force, though I don't think you should have your own way in every case. I have one request to make. Perhaps you will condescend to respect it. Don't kill yourself."

"I am not one of the killing kind," rejoined Margaret, going up-stairs. "Good-by for the present. You may call tomorrow, if you will."

Brian did call to-morrow, and this second visit only confirmed the opinion expressed in his first. Mrs. Ivens was dying—from no special disease, but from a gradual giving away of the vital forces. A life of care and anxiety, vexations and privations, and wearying struggles to make both ends meet, had told at last on the delicate constitution. Many who fall by the wayside are not less brave than those who reach the martyr's stake, and, if the truest heroes are those who bear life's burdens uncomplainingly, Mrs. Ivens might justly wear the crown of heroism.

Margaret was faithful to her trust. Others came and went, but she remained by the sick bed, Brian examined his extremities in vain, and even Christmas Eve could not tempt her to leave her friend.

"You tell me her hours are numbered. Let me stay until the end. It cannot be very long now."

And Brian said no more. Mrs. Ivens' hours were, indeed, numbered. The flame of life burnt fainter and fainter, and when the night of Christmas Eve passed into the dawn of Christmas Day, the angels of life and death crossed in their pathway, and the tired soul found the land of perpetual rest—the joys of eternal morning. The incidents of those closing moments were indelibly photographed on Margaret's mind.

helpless. You must help me to get well, Margaret. Help me to get strong. Why do you turn your eyes away? Is it because— Ah! is it because you think I shall never be well again? Sometimes I have thought so too, and I have prayed that it may not be so, for James' sake and my babies."

The weak voice broke, and Margaret, incapable of a word, could only press the hot hand between her own cool ones while her eyes burned with the tears she found so hard to withhold.

She was very glad when the doctor came in a few moments later and she could leave the room to overcome her emotion and write the following note to Brian:

DEAR BRIAN—Do not expect me home to dinner. Mrs. Ivens is very ill. Will you come here this afternoon? I am anxious to see you.

Finding a boy, Margaret directed him to leave the note at Elmwood.

CHAPTER XIII. BRIAN'S CHRISTMAS OFF.

When Brian came to the rectory that afternoon Margaret asked him to go up and see Mrs. Ivens.

"I wish your candid opinion," she said. "I think she is very ill, for Ellen is not the one to give up until forced to do so."

From his brief visit Brian came down with a serious face. Margaret was standing in the lower hall, and one glance made her heart sink heavily.

"The case is hopeless," he said, in answer to the question she was trying to frame. "I am so sorry for you."

"Rather be sorry for them," she rejoined, trying to shut out the sympathetic face, which made it more difficult for her to be calm. "Who will tell him? Do you suppose he can ever be reconciled to her loss?"

"I don't know," interposed Brian, for want of a better answer. "I suppose we must all be reconciled to whatever comes to us."

"Ah! don't. It is cruel to talk of being reconciled. I'd never be reconciled. Never!"

With these abrupt words, she started to move away, but her tears blinded her, and she would have fallen had not Brian, quick to detect her weakness, caught her in his arms.

"This will not do, Margaret," he said, with some authority. "I think you had better go home with me. You will make yourself ill."

"What nonsense, Brian! I am not watching a few hours with a sick friend? I wouldn't be fit to live if that were the case. This is not physical weakness."

"Aren't there others to do for Mrs. Ivens?" he asked, with some warmth. "Why should it all fall on your shoulders?"

"All fall on my shoulders? Oh, Brian, how you do exaggerate! Of course there are others. Plenty of them. Everybody loves her, but for some reason she likes to have me with her. And with her I intend to stay."

you home now. It is Christmas, you know, and I—

"Christmas!" she echoed, in a far-away voice. "Are you sure, Brian? Christmas always brings happiness, I thought, and there is no happiness here. I am ready to go home, though. I believe, so very tired. I don't feel that I can ever be rested again."

Brian looked his concern. Such weakness was unusual in Margaret.

"I am afraid you have done wrong," he said, with some reproach. "You should have taken my advice, Margaret; but I suppose it is too late to scold now. You need rest. That is evident."

Margaret scarcely heard him. She rose rather unsteadily and started to leave the room, but with sudden remembrance she turned back with the words:

"I shall take the children to Elmwood. Christmas here would be a mockery for them."

A shado of annoyance passed over his face. "It would be useless to oppose you, even if I desired to do so," he returned. "Take them, of course, but do let Mrs. Davis care for them. I won't have you worrying yourself into an illness. I believe in a certain amount of sympathy, but too much is too much."

"I only want to go to bed and sleep forever," was Margaret's answer. "I am so tired from being sorry."

"Then the sooner you go home the better. I have the carriage, and if you are ready—"

"In a second, Brian. I will not keep you waiting long."

This time of waiting was spent by Margaret in the darkened room, where the doctor sat by all that remained to him of a beloved wife.

She approached the still form and pressed a long kiss on the pale brow. She felt the doctor's burning eyes upon her and she heard the hoarse words with which he turned to her:

"How am I to live my life alone?" She longed for the answer to comfort him, yet all the sympathy she could express seemed to hold the mockery of easy consolation.

"There are the children," she said in a low voice. "Four loving little hearts to make your life less lonely. And there is God. He sends the cross, and He sends the strength to bear it. We see so often. What seems so hard to us often a kindness from our Father's hands. We must have here in suffering and tribulation, but for her the crown has come before the cross had grown too heavy. Father, touch our hearts to say 'They will be done.'"

Leaving the echo of her prayer behind her, Margaret joined Brian, with the four grave-faced children, upon whose childish minds the intangible shadow and silence had made such a solemn impression.

She found it hard to meet the pathetic inquiry of the baby eyes, and she was quite relieved when she could give her new charges into the kindly care of the surprised Mrs. Davis. After this, she went to bed and slept for the remainder of the day, and when dinner time arrived her inclinations were so decidedly against rising that she could scarcely force herself to dress and join Brian.

"He'll find me rather deaf at best," she remarked to the heavy eyes and pale, tired face which looked at her from the mirror. "I suppose I must try to be choicert."

But her short talk with Elsie, just before dinner, did not tend to brighten her spirits.

THE BLUE AND THE GRAY

BRAVE MEN WHO MET UPON THE FIELD OF BATTLE.

Thrilling Stories of the Hebebon-Old Soldiers and Sailors Recite Interesting Reminiscences of Life in Camp and on the Field.

The March of Company A. "Forward, march!" was the Captain's word. As the tramp of a hundred men was heard, they formed into line in the morning gray; shoulder to shoulder went Company A.

Out of the shadow into the sun. A hundred men who moved as one; Out of the dawn into the day; Glistening files went Company A.

Marching along to the rendezvous. The grass' meadows the road ran through; By springing combats and orchards gay; Forward, forward, went Company A.

And the pink and white of the apple trees, Falling fast on the hill above; Scattered their dew, scattered spray Straight into the face of Company A.

A breath like a sigh ran through the ranks; Trembling the soldiers' blue and gray; For the orchard hillsides far away. The Northern hillsides of Company A.

Forward, march! and the dream was sped; Out of the pipe went straight ahead; Clattered the ranks of the blue and gray; Face to face with Company A.

Port with a flash in the Southern sun A hundred sabres leaped like one; Snud drum beat and bugle play Sounded the charge for Company A.

Wait! What is here? A stumbling child, Roused by the blast of the bugle wild; Her gathered apron with blossoms gay, She staid at the gate of Company A.

Nothing knowing of North or South, Her dimpled finger within her mouth, Her gathered apron with blossoms gay, She staid at the gate of Company A.

Straightway set for a sign of trace; While a hundred of the Southern race; In front of the gate of the blue and gray Galloped the Captain of Company A.

To his saddle-bow he swung the child, With a kiss on the baby lips that smiled, While the boys in blue and the boys in gray, Cheered for the Captain of Company A.

Out of the arms that held her safe, He took with a smile the little wife; A grip of the hand 'twixt blue and gray, And back to the Captain of Company A.

Up there in the distant cottage door, Her husband's hand she held once more; Shrouding the path of Company A.

A little later and all was done; The battle was over, the victory won; Nothing was left of the morning's fray; That except the ruins of Company A.

Nothing left, save the bloody stain; Darkening the church's roof; Dead the Chief of the Southern gray, And dead the Captain of Company A.

Fallen together, the gray and blue, From the final rendezvous; Aid-Forward, march! went Company A.—The Century.

The U. S. R. Encampment. PEAKING OF the Grand Army Encampment in Washington a New York paper says:

It was a spectacle which no other nation on the globe can rival and one to make every American heart beat with pride for the country and gratitude to its defenders. In the monarchies of Europe a Grand Army Review is a meeting of military corps—regular soldiers called from active service in barracks and posts of duty. The Grand Army meeting in Washington was a reunion of citizens who left field and factory, counting house and exchange, home and business to unite in fraternal greeting and affectionate commemoration of the days when they responded to the call of their country and offered their lives as a volunteer host that "government of the people, by the people and for the people should not perish from the earth."

As they stood shoulder to shoulder in war, so they now march side by side in peace, not as Democrats or Republicans, not as Catholics or Protestants, not as native or foreign born, not as white or black, not as rich or poor, not as employers and employes, but as equal citizens of the nation, gathered under the common banner of the Republic and animated by a common spirit of Americanism.

Though banded together for a quarter of a century, during which period they have come together yearly, this was the first meeting in the capitol of the nation since they donned the uniform and laid aside the arms of the soldier at the close of the war. What a contrast between the march of 1865 in the same thoroughfares.

Then the spectacle was moving columns of victorious soldiers returned from historic battle fields, armed and uniformed, stepping to martial strains and carrying tattered banners. As conquerors they marched triumphantly through the streets of the capitol which they had so nobly defended. Across the Potomac lay the great South devastated by war, with four million blacks freed but not enfranchised, with common wealths appearing as sovereign States but as conquered provinces, its industries paralyzed, its people impoverished, its future doubtful. In the North and West the people, though jubilant with victory, were depressed with the sacrifices and exactions of the greatest war known to history. Business and industry were crippled and homes by the thousand darkened by mourning.

What a transformation the spectacle of to-day marks! Time has thinned the ranks of the veterans who recently marched through the streets of the capitol, and most of the chieftains who led them to victory—Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and others have gone to the great beyond. They are floating from the dome of the Capitol a flag with forty-four stars, symbol of a Republic of 65,000,000 people, united, contented and prosperous. Looking southward they behold not foes but fellow citizens of a common country. They now see every State a sovereign, every man a free man. They see a land no longer showing traces of deadly conflict, but signs of industrial and commercial activity on every side. There, as well as in the North and West, all blotkoms the blessings of peace, contentment and prosperity.

just he saved Ned.

"I have seen a great many men killed," said Burke McMahon, at the Southern. "I was with old Pop Thomas at Chickamauga, when his corps stood like a rock for the flower of the Confederacy to beat and break upon, and with Grant when he hurled his columns at the impregnable heights of Vicksburg. I have seen commanding officers torn to pieces with a shell, and headless boys dead on the battle field with their mother's picture pressed to their cold lips, but I never had anything affect me like the death of a couple of young railroad men in Texas seven or eight years ago. I was riding on the engine of a fast passenger train, and at Waco the engineer got orders to look out for a brakeman who was missing from the freight we were following. He was supposed to have fallen between the cars of his train. 'My brother is braking on that train. I wonder if it can be him?' said the fireman. 'I'll keep up steam while you stand on the pilot and watch out,' replied the engineer. The fireman took his post in front, and we pulled out. We had just gotten well under way when the fireman gave the signal to stop. The engineer applied the air-brakes. They failed to respond and we were on a down grade, and could not stop. The missing brakeman was lying on the track, badly mangled but conscious. He raised his hand and frantically signalled the train, but the great iron machine went plunging down upon him at the rate of twenty miles an hour. The fireman cast one despairing look at the engineer, then sprang in front of the pilot and hurled his worn-out brother off the track. But he was not quick enough to save himself. The engine caught him and crushed both legs off at the hips. As we picked him up he said with a quiet smile: 'I'm no use, boys; I'm done for. But I saved Ned.' We laid them down in the baggage car, side by side. Ned put out a feeble hand and clasped that of his brother. 'I've got my time, old fellow,' he said. 'Here, too, Ned; we'll make the run to the next world together.' This was the response, and a holding each other by the hand they died without another word."—Globe-Democrat.

Under Fire. SHALL never forget the first time I was under fire, says a veteran. We were supporting a battery and had laid down on a stretch of ground as level as a ball room floor. The enemy was beyond rifle shot, but they opened on us with artillery, and they did everlasting plow up the ground with shot and shell. After the artillery duel had raged for some time a regiment of the enemy cavalry debouched from the wood with all the deliberation and precision of a dress parade. They halted and dressed ranks while the batteries behind them hurled a perfect rain of shells over their heads. We could see their colonel riding down the line and pointing with his sword to our battery, which was plunging shells in among them with frightful rapidity, but little effect. They advanced a step or two, every horseman seeming to choose his ground. Here they came, slowly, steadily, like a great gray wave, conscious of irresistible power. The bugle rings out sharp and shrill, they break into a quick trot, 800 sabres leap into the air and flag steams out on the smoky background like a portentous meteor. On they come; 800 yards, 700, 600! God! has our battery gone silent? Five hundred, 400! charge! Every spur sinks deep, the enemy's yell rises from every throat, and the column leaps forward like a thunderbolt, into the face of which crashes the canister from our four six-pounders. Great ragged holes are torn through the four deep column, but they close instantly and it comes on unchecked. Now it is our turn! We are in front of the battery, in the pathway of the avalanche. We pour a volley into it at 80 yards! A hundred brave men reel out of their saddles, a hundred horses go plunging to their knees! The line wavers! Another volley and another! The line breaks, and suddenly retreats. While we swing our caps and cheer and hug each other for joy. And that was war!

Identifying a General. For two or three days the waiter at my table had called me "General" whenever he could ring in the title, and, of course, I allowed the same to stand. At noon one day a young man took his place at the table, and the waiter addressed him as "General" and shoved me on the back seat with "Jedge." I didn't say anything until I caught him out on the veranda two hours later. Then I observed:

"George, up to this noon you were calling me General."

"Yes sah."

"But as soon as that young man came in you gave him my title."

"Yes sah; had to do it sah."

"Why did you have to do it?"

"Bekuse I seed that he was a real general, sah, an' yo' wasn't. Sorry sah, but we dun can't afford to make no mistakes at dis hotel."

"Did he register as a general?"

"Dunno sah."

"Did he tell you he was a general?"

"No, sah."

"Then how do you know he is a general?"

"Seed it wid my own eyes, Jedge, de minit he got outen de bus. He's got creases on de back side of his pant legs sah, an' dat's de way we tell a general down yere an' nebber make no mistake."

Death of Mrs. Chapin.

Mrs. Jane Pense Chapin passed away at the family homestead in Vevay, Thursday, October 20th.

Mrs. Chapin was born in Livonia, N. Y., March 31st, 1814, and married the late Almon M. Chapin, July 16th, 1836. January, 1842, they came to Michigan and settled upon the farm where they ever after resided. Almost the whole of Ingham county was at that time a wilderness and settlers were few.

Accustomed to every comfort in her eastern home, Mrs. Chapin bravely accepted the hardships of pioneer life, and did her full part in the work of establishing the new home, where she always dispensed a generous hospitality, welcoming even the stranger and turning no needy one away. She was accustomed to relate many interesting and amusing things connected with the early days, and recounted more than one thrilling adventure of her pioneer experiences.

She was the mother of eleven children, six of whom survive her. All were at her funeral last Saturday afternoon Almon M. Chapin of Stockton, California.

The funeral services were conducted by the Rev. W. P. Dickerman, pastor of the Universalist church of Lansing, of which Mrs. Chapin had been for many years a member.

She was tenderly borne to the grave by her four sons, Henry L. Clarence W., Julius W. and Merrick W. Chapin and her two nephews, W. H. Horton and A. S. Hawley.

Thus has passed away another of the fast diminishing number of the pioneers of Ingham county.

She Committed Suicide.

Mrs. F. C. Come at Paris left this letter: "My husband—Forgive me if I cause you trouble, but I suffer so. You do not know what these long, wakeful, wretched nights are to me, and I am so tired, darling—the pain will never be better. It is not easy to take my own life, but I have been sick so long. Good-bye, my husband, I love you—your wife." This is but one of thousands that gives up, instead of using Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, and being speedily cured of their wretchedness. CHICAGO SPECIAL: The World's Columbian Exposition has been formally opened.

The series of celebrations consequent upon the dedicatory exercises was inaugurated in Chicago's streets Thursday morning, when the gorgeous civic pageant marched before delighted thousands. The command which put

In motion the mighty column of nearly a hundred thousand opened an event that will go ringing down the ages as the most brilliant page in the history of a great and prosperous nation. No such multitude as surged through the streets has Chicago ever before seen. Political convention with their crowds and clamor were left far behind, and the scene on the down-town thoroughfares as the great parade moved off will be long remembered alike by Chicagoans and by the visitors who thronged the city.

It was close to the noon hour when the vanguard of stalwart policemen spurred their restless horses and wheeled into line. General Miles and his brilliantly uniformed military aids, and the more brilliantly attired civilians of his staff, came into view, and presently the advance guard of that vast army of 100,000 men was in motion. Everywhere along the line of march the distinguished men as well as the organizations making the most striking displays were greeted with enthusiastic cheering. Through the sun had hid himself behind a bank of clouds, and the sky looked down with a lowering face upon the moving display of animation and colors, nothing could damp the ardor of the crowd, and nothing that was worthy escaped their notice. From the grand stand on the Adams street front of the Government Building, Vice President Levi P. Morton, the members of the Cabinet, the Supreme Court, and diplomats from all the nations which witnessed the grand civic parade as it passed in review. In the streets there was a mob; it cannot be called by any other name. This was essentially people's day in the series of ceremonies. Wednesday night's grand ball at the Auditorium was a notable event, but the participants were confined to the upper ten in official and social life, for Governors, legislators and diplomats, Thursday night's military ball was for the same classes. Friday's military parade was confined principally to the limits of the fair grounds, to which admission could be had only by card of invitation. But Thursday's show was wide open to whoever could get a point from which to see. The bootblack and roustabout, or the laborer, was as free as the millionaire or pet of society.

DEDICATORY EXERCISES.
Impressive Ceremonies in the Great Mammalian Building.

Friday was the great Columbian dedicatory day, proper, and on this day the big programme for which the whole country has been preparing for months was given.

The day's exercises began with a salute of twenty-one guns on the Lake Front.

At 9:15 o'clock the dedicatory parade was started. Gen. Miles and his staff came down the boulevard at the head of a glittering company of United States troops. The even lines of yellow plumes rising and falling in unison, the steady trot of the horses, the quietness and precision of every movement, was a revelation to spectators unused to military pageants.

The staff of Gen. Miles was followed by the mounted band. Then came a troop after troop of cavalry, presenting a solid line twelve deep, extending from curb to curb. Three troops of white cavalry, with tanned and bearded faces; a troop of Indian cavalry, copper-colored and expressionless, and a troop of colored cavalry, black and smiling—that is the way they came.

After the cavalry was another mounted band, and then appeared artillery, which rolled over the uneven cobble blocks about 12th street at a smart trot. The regular artillery were followed by a battery of the National Guard. The volunteer boys were not so smart as the regulars, but they looked very business-like and full of powder.

The escort was not yet finished, for smoothly and silently came a troop mounted on wheels—the Toledo cadets. The people gave the sixty men a cheer as they passed, which sounded well down the street, for their soldierly appearance and the even manner in which they handled their iron steeds were very noticeable.

The brilliant escort which had passed was none too brilliant for the array of power, wealth, and intellect which was now to follow, when the Governors of the country and the men who have directed the affairs of the Exposition rode and drove in public parade to the dedication of the World's Fair.

First in the line of carriages which followed the troops was the highest representative of the Government of the United States, Vice President Morton, and escort. In company with the Vice President were Palmer of the Fair Commission and ex-President Baker of the World's Fair.

Then followed the Governors of the different States and other notables, with their aides and attendants, the whole making a glittering and imposing spectacle that will be remembered as long as the dedication ceremonies shall hold a place in history. The parade marched down the gayly decorated boulevard to Washington Park, where the military review occurred.

Starting for the Buildings.
After this event was over the cavalry procession as an escort started from the Washington Park reviewing stand, marching up Palmer avenue and through Midway Plaisance to the entrance of the grounds. The route along the whole line was rich with decorations of every description, the colors of all nations being thrown to the breeze in great profusion, with the flags of America and Spain the most prominent.

At the junction of Cottage Grove avenue and the Plaisance a squad of police under Lieut. Powers was stationed, at the Woodlawn intersection was Lieut. Hinch with another squad of police, while between the forces of Powers and Hinch there was a space of about half a mile in which there were no police. Into this gap the crowd rushed without hindrance and soon became unmanageable. All was confusion and the crowd threatened to interfere considerably with the progress of the procession.

But everything was later put to rights by the appearance of the troops, which had been held in reserve at the grounds to regulate the parade. The coming of the troops soon restored order among the crowd. The people obeyed with great good humor when the soldiers, who had been formed in line down each side of the road, ordered them back. In a few minutes the whole stretch of road unprotected by the police was picketed by the troops. After the procession had passed the soldiers fell in behind and formed a rear-guard to the parade. When the military parade entered the grounds over the parade it made an almost entire circuit, before dispersing at the end of the park. Then the dignitaries and invited guests began to enter the big Manufacturers Building and the great procession was over.

Within the Manufacturers Building.
The scene in the great hall, as viewed from the platform at 10 o'clock, was thrilling. It was a spectacle that in coming years will mark an epoch in the march of the nations of the earth. And when any one in the time that is to come American history shall be written, no man in the chill of calm thought will be able to paint with words the dedicatory scene. Does one who was not present gain any notion of the meaning of fifty acres of packed humanity? Does he get an impression of vastness when he knows that St. Peter's at Rome might be put within the great structure and with room left? What does it mean to say that 100,000 persons may be comfortably seated and room left for 75,000 more?

The chief decorations in the great building were at the rear of the grand stand and arched over the broad, carpeted aisle through which the dignitaries sought their places on the platform. From the roof streamers of bunting of yellow and red and white drooped down from the iron girders to the sides of the great iron arches. There was a background of great flags with the stars and stripes drawn smoothly at points and tastefully draped in others, while in the center an eagle carved in stone formed the nucleus of a glorious standard of colors. On one side of this setting, hanging from away up on one of the iron arches, depended the banner of Spain. There was also displayed for the first time on a near-by arch the official banner of the World's Columbian Exposition.

Out upon the great, vast floor, under the arches and the depending flags, forest of chairs had been placed, and when the crowd had come in and the people had gathered, a great, nervous, moving sea of humanity roared with ebullient hum and buzz of talk and comment. The gallery up among the arches of iron and surrounding the entire building was filled and blackened with humanity.

and hear the preliminary blare of the brass instruments, which are being put through preliminary operation for the music which is to come. Diffuse over this entire scene the growing murmur, which at times mounts to a roar, and a faint idea of the scene may be pictured on the mental vision.

On one who has never seen the be-hemoth buildings in Jackson Park, it may be impossible to give an adequate idea of the colossal magnitude of the great spectacle. National conventions have been accepted as great assemblages, yet several national conventions could have been held in the lobbies without interference with the people in the main room.

This wonder of the engineering world does not seem a building. The dimensions are mountains and not architectural. Standing against the rail of the floor in long, sweeping the broad expanse of busy floor, the scene is a landscape and not an interior. The light and sparkle of rich costumes and jeweled decorations are the sprinkled flowers nesting against the darker color of the uplift. When 100,000 people waved their handkerchiefs, the prospect was that of a thick cotton-field tossed by a high wind. In the exciting moments when enthusiasm took a violent turn, the demonstration was not that of individuals, but of the undulating whole. A man in the thick of this scene was as nothing, a black spot mixed and ground into the color of the picture.

When the multitude assembled the people came drifting in granular currents along the narrow avenues. Further along they closed upon each other in the steady push forward until it was next to Mrs. LeMoyno, but was too busy to maintain it for any length of time. It was a pleasant sight watching the great men braked in torments while they waited for the tumult to subside and the programme to begin.

Opened the Dedicatory Exercises.
The dedicatory exercises were commenced by the great chorus singing the Columbian hymn.

The words of the hymn are as follows: All hail and welcome, nations of the earth! Columbia's greeting comes from every State; Proclaim to all mankind the world's new birth Of freedom, age on age shall consecrate.

Let war and enmity forever cease; Let nations arm and nations banish wrong; The universal brotherhood of peace Shall be Columbia's inspiring song.

Then came the invocation of Bishop Charles H. Fowler of California. It was the first test of a speaker's voice before the multitude, and demonstrated instantly the futility of any attempt to reach more than a small section of the great multitude. Ignorant of the religious nature of the address, the throng murmured and rustled until the swelling wave overwhelmed the speaker's voice and sent his words adrift on a sea of sounds.

The invocation over, Director General Davis adjusted his eye-glasses, tossed back the gray locks on his forehead and advanced to the stand, manuscript in hand. His trumpet-like voice, his well-known features and the commanding office he represented commanded the tumult about him and sent a ripple of silence far into the crowd. His address was a brief recital of national triumphs, closing with a concise statement of the purpose for which the exposition had been inaugurated. The simplicity of the words and the excited thought they conveyed found a quick response in his hearers, bringing interruptions of applause and a volley of vocal approval at the close.

Mayor Washburne was then introduced to deliver an address of welcome and tender the freedom of the city. His tones, while lacking in resonance, were enunciated so clearly and with such surprising strength that his thought won the ear of the guests of the day to whom he addressed himself. Citizens of Chicago, too, responded enthusiastically when he declared the city's greatness and wealth of promise.

Following the Mayor came readings by Mrs. Sarah Cowell LeMoyno, of New York, from Miss Monroe's dedicatory ode. The reading comprised only a fragment of the poem, alternating with verses sung by the chorus from music composed by G. W. Chadwick, of Boston.

As Mrs. LeMoyno finished reading Director General Davis presented her with a wreath on behalf of the women of Chicago. This was a simple affair of tural leaves bound with yellow and terra cotta ribbon. The cheers that followed this act brought Miss Harriet Monroe, the author, to her feet, and she also was presented with a like memento, which she acknowledged by a graceful bow and smile.

Director of Works Burnham formally presented the designers, painters, and sculptors of the Exposition with commemorative medals. Mr. Burnham's voice is not calculated to reach the galleries, and he made no attempt in that direction. As he took his seat he was met by the usual cheer, taken up in the galleries and echoed by the individuals hanging from the girders well up to the dome.

Mrs. Potter Palmer's address, "Work of the Board of Lady Managers" was enthusiastically received. She was introduced by Director General Davis and received with a standing salute, in which the dignitaries joined. The President of the Board of Lady Managers acknowledged this reception by a modest bow and proceeded at once with her report, looking down upon the waving of handkerchiefs and smiling, expectant faces.

J. N. Higginbotham, President of the Chicago Directory, made the presentation of the buildings of the Columbian Exposition to President T. W. Palmer of the Columbian Commission. Mr. Palmer, leaning his hand upon the decorated stand, listened to the short, terse talk of Mr. Higginbotham, and then, when he had hypothetically been tendered the documents, turned and faced the audience, took a sip of water and delivered his address. Frequent applause met this speaker, perhaps because his trained voice penetrated farther across the floor space. A short history of the work in bringing the sands and quarries of Jackson Park to the solid and massive buildings and beautiful gardens was reviewed, and in it the story of how the commission had reached to the uttermost parts of the earth was told. The general was greatly applauded for his eloquence.

Dedicated the Grounds to Humanity.
When President Palmer turned to formally make the presentation, which he did to the President of the United States, Vice President Morton arose. A signal from Col. Davis the audience stood as one, and prolonged cheers. Vice President Morton, representing President Harrison, stood half facing the audience and speaker, and was asked to dedicate the ground to humanity.

Accepting the trust on behalf of the President of the United States, Vice President Morton read his speech with an evident appreciation of the greatness of the occasion, pausing in effective periods and emphasizing the national sanction of the Exposition. As he turned to take his chair at the conclusion, the Diplomatic Corps rose and stood until he was seated. That was the signal for more enthusiastic cheering, which continued until the majestic "Hallelujah Chorus" silenced it.

Waterson Delivers the Oration.
Then came the two greatest features of a great programme—the orations by Henry Waterson and Chauncey H. Dewey. Mr. Waterson abandoned his manuscript when Director General Du-vis announced his name, and walking to the front of the stand took his place before a bewildering tumult of applause and waving hats and handkerchiefs from the throng that had risen to greet him. Without hesitation, except when interrupted by applause, the speaker plunged into his subject. His earnestness, the rich tones of his voice, the commanding personality of the man impressed even those who could not catch his words. Rapidly he reviewed the "Columbian ope," pursuing on to seem the progress of American civilization, closing with an invocation of the greatest solemnity. As he uttered the sentences "God bless the children and the mothers! God bless our country's flag!" a rift in the clouded sky sent a flash of sunlight through the curved roof that centered on the rugged figure of the orator, as though a benediction had been vouchsafed in answer to his plea. The crowd caught the suggestion and became as still as waiting petitioners before the heavenly throne—mute witnesses to the orator's power.

Chauncey H. Dewey's Address.
When Mr. Waterson touched the climax of his peroration and stopped by his seat, there was an instant's hush, followed by deafening cheers that broke out again when Chauncey Dewey was announced. Mr. Dewey's style was in striking contrast to the Kentucky editor's, but his achievement was parallel. Reading his speech, he was seemingly oblivious to the printed words. In moments of excitement he waved the manuscript in emphasis, never using word or abating for an instant his perfect command of the striking phrases. His voice, forced to the volume of a great organ, rolled out over the crowd and held it as with a chord of steel. Occasionally some absorbed listener, wrought by the stirring sentiment, spoke his approval and started ejaculations of assent, but the orator never wavered.

In places the theme changed from Homeric solemnity to a lighter vein, and moved the hearers to laughter, but it was only to relieve the tension for an instant—light touch in a picture of titanic lines.

When Mr. Dewey had concluded, there was no question as to his triumph. He had reached the hearts of his listeners and they responded with reverberating acclamations, a tribute such as even so great an orator could not feel deeply.

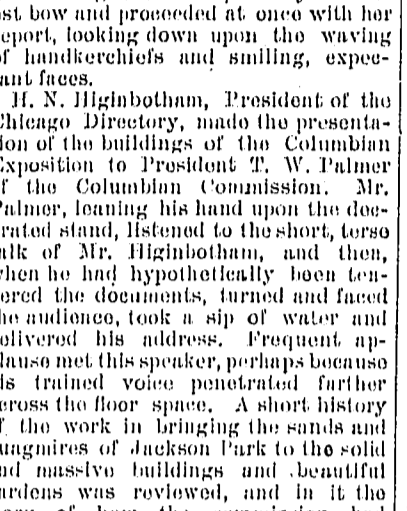

By this time approaching night had turned the great hall into a cavern of eerie shadows. Air lights suspended in clusters warned the tired people of the close of day. Some departed, littering out in long pedestrian lines, while those who remained crowded closer to the front to hear the brilliant closing prayer by Cardinal Gibbons. Then came the chorus "In Praise of God," the benediction by Rev. H. C. McCook of Philadelphia, and, at 6 o'clock the farewell words of Director General Davis, announcing the formal close of the exercises.

As the director general finished his speech a battery on the shore announced the final completion of Chicago's trust the erection and dedication of the great buildings that are to hold the World's Columbian Exposition of 1893. The great Fair had been formally opened.

Significance of the Dedication.
From the first gun that boomed in Jackson Park at daybreak to the last echo of the national salute that closed the exercises, it was a day of great significance, filled with historic features and personalities.

The progress of humanity in four centuries was illustrated in the great building where the exercises were held. A Cardinal of Rome sat on the same platform and spoke from the same stand with a Protestant Bishop; Catholic Spain and Mohammedan Turkey joined in fraternal greetings; French representatives bowed cordially to German ambassadors, and all wished the American republic Godspeed in its international undertaking. It was a jubilee congress of all nations, rejoicing in the peaceful triumph of science and art that had found expression in the buildings and grounds of the Exposition.

Remembering that Columbus made his discovery at a time when war was the rule of all kingdoms and religious tolerance unknown; remembering this, and gazing on the good-fellowship of the congregated dignitaries, the lesson of human brotherhood itself seemed a worthy consecration of a World's Fair. The impressive view of foreign fraternity, however, was lost in the vast part of the gathered thousands before them. It seemed a republic of no small dimensions within those four walls. Banker and artisan, laborer and manufacturer touched elbows in the democracy of a common interest.

The speeches, the prayers, the songs and ceremonies all caught the spirit of national pride and international fraternity. Listeners, as diverse in national origin as the ambassadors before them, forgot their prejudices of race and joined in demonstration of patriotic union under the glory of flags that spanned the arches above them.

FIREWORKS DISPLAY.
Elaborate Programme in Washington, Lincoln, and Garfield Parks.

As became the dignity of the occasion, the fireworks display Friday night was a record breaker. It was probably the finest pyrotechnic display the world has ever witnessed.

Properly speaking there were three displays, the exhibition having been arranged in that manner to avoid the concentration of great masses of people at one point. At each place the fireworks were exactly alike. Twenty-five thousand dollars' worth of rockets and fire-potents glowed and sizzled at Washington, Lincoln and Garfield parks. The programme in each park was the same and included about everything that could go up or go off from the well-known sky-rockets—which on this occasion soared in flocks of 5,000—to huge bombs, weighing 10 pounds, which were thrown 800 feet into the air and then exploded gorgeously. "August Flower"

"What is August Flower for?" As easily answered as asked. It is for Dyspepsia. It is a special remedy for the Stomach and Liver. Nothing more than this. We believe August Flower cures Dyspepsia. We know it will. We have reasons for knowing it. To-day it has an honored place in every town and country store, possesses one of the largest manufacturing plants in the country, and sells everywhere. The reason is simple. It does one thing, and does it right. It cures dyspepsia.

AT BEDTIME I TAKE A PLEASANT LAXATIVE

LANE'S MEDICINE

Two Great Remedies.

The human citadel is open to attacks from two sources, and, aside from accidents, these two are the avenues from which all of the maladies that afflict the race spring. The first of these are what are known as the excretory organs. These are the lungs, the kidneys, and the skin. These suffer from congestion, which takes the form of colds. Starting from what is called a cold, the maladies that result are widespread, ranging from a cough to consumption. They attack all ages and all stations. No one is free from these troubles. There is, however, a remedy that is a safeguard. This is REID'S GERMAN COUGH AND KIDNEY CURE. It contains no poison, but it will heal any form of lung trouble, or any malady that arises from a cold. The other class of diseases arise from derangement of the digestive organs, and result in constipation. When the bowels do not act, the stomach soon refuses to digest the food, and we are troubled with indigestion, fever, and a long train of disorders that embrace a wide range of maladies. The Laxative Gum-Drops will correct any difficulty of this sort. They contain nothing deleterious, but are safe and pleasant. Get them of any dealer.

Tasks That Must Be Done.

Nature has assigned important tasks to the liver and the bowels, and being mutually dependent upon each other for the regular and adequate discharge of these tasks, a cessation of work by one causes the other to lapse into inactivity. The tasks of secretion and evacuation must be performed, or the system is poisoned and disordered. Moreover, fatal inflammation of the bowels or abscess of the liver are apt to ensue if function of these organs is allowed to go unheeded. The dangerous tendency should be checked at the outset with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, an anti-bilious specific and laxative without a peer. Never use this medicine cause a pain of the stomach or uneasiness of the bowels. It does its remedial work pleasantly through with reasonable activity. It cures indigestion and rheumatic disease, kidney complaints, and relieves dyspepsia and nervousness.

WHEN NATURE
Needs assistance it may be best to render it promptly, but one should remember to use even the most perfect remedies only when needed. The best and most simple, and gentle remedy is the Syrup of Figs, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co.

Mucilage.
The addition of a few drops of glycerine to a bottle of mucilage will cause it to adhere to the other polished surfaces when not exposed to a high degree of heat or moisture. Gum tragacanth mucilage is also to be depended upon for this purpose.

Fine Playing Cards.
Send 10 cents in stamps to John Sebastian, Gen'l Ticket and Pass. Agt., C. R. I. & P. R'y, Chicago, for a pack of the "Hock Island" Playing Cards. They are acknowledged the best and worth five times the price. Send money order or postal note for $1.00, and will send five packs by express, prepaid.

The Sunburst.
The smallest musical box has been produced. It is in a gold case, and plays one tune. Instead of a separate barrel for the pins, these are inserted on the spring barrel.

It is queer, but a lively bolt often results in a dead lock.

WATER.
An average of five feet of water is estimated to fall annually over the whole earth, and assuming that condensation takes place at an average height of three thousand feet, scientists conclude that the force of evaporation to supply such rainfall must equal the lifting of three hundred and twenty-two million pounds of water three thousand feet in every minute, or about three hundred billion horse power constantly exerted. Of this prodigious amount of energy thus created, a very small proportion is transferred to the waters that run back through rivers to the sea, and a still smaller fraction is utilized by man; the remainder is dissipated in space.

PROBABLY one of the reasons the Chinese are called headhens is the fact that on New Year's they must settle up all debts or be declared bankrupts and not permitted to continue in business. Such a system or custom as that is headhens. How are we to have brown strong fronts and millionaires if every debt has to be paid once a year? Such an example as the Chinese set in this matter of settling debts is outrageous. The Chinese must go.

MERCURIAL
Mr. J. C. Jones, of Fulton, Ark., says of Mercurial: "About ten years ago I contracted a terrible sore throat, and was unable to eat or drink. My doctor prescribed medicine after medicine, which I took without any relief. I also tried mercurial and potash remedies, with unsuccessful results, but which brought on an attack of mercurial rheumatism that made my life one of agony. After suffering four years I gave up all remedies and commenced using S. S. S. After taking several bottles, I was entirely cured and able to resume work. S. S. S. is the greatest medicine for blood poisoning to-day on the market."

WAT OF THE WEATHER

FOSTER'S FORECASTS TELL THE STORY.
A Severe Storm Accompanied by Electrical Disturbances Will Cross the Mississippi Valley About October 31—Cooler Weather Will Follow.

Cool Weather Coming.
My last bulletin gave forecasts of the storm waves to cross the continent from 4th to 26th, and the next will reach the Pacific coast about the 20th, cross the western mountains by the close of the 30th, the great central valleys from October 31st to November 2d, and the Eastern States about November 3d.

This will be a severe storm, and at 1/2 the greatest force while crossing the Mississippi Valley. An electric storm will probably accompany this disturbance, causing many difficulties in the telegraphic service. This electric storm will probably be at its greatest force about Nov. 4 or 5.

The cool wave will cross the Western mountains about Nov. 1, the great Central valleys about the 3d, and the Eastern States about the 5th.

Local Forecasts.
Weather changes move from west to east across the continent, and each local forecast is made for within 250 miles east and west of the magnetic meridian mentioned, and for all the country between 25 and 50 degrees of north latitude. These local weather changes will occur within twenty-four hours before or after sunset of the dates given.

BOTH TARIFF AND TAX.

Gov. Boies Tells the Truth About the McKinley Bill Results.
In his recent speech at Ottumwa, Iowa, Gov. Boies said:

I am here to address you from the standpoint of the tariff. I have the honor to represent in the State. While it shall be my purpose to do so in a way that may be regarded as offensive to some, I shall not be deterred from doing so by any man who may think differently from myself and from those with whom I get politically. Just what are the conditions of our State and our country, and what is for the interest of one of us in Iowa is certainly for the interest of the State. I have the honor to represent in the State. While it shall be my purpose to do so in a way that may be regarded as offensive to some, I shall not be deterred from doing so by any man who may think differently from myself and from those with whom I get politically. Just what are the conditions of our State and our country, and what is for the interest of one of us in Iowa is certainly for the interest of the State.

I have been told that this audience is composed almost entirely of farmers, and I shall, therefore, confine my remarks to that broad argument which seems to me most appropriate before such an audience. There are many reasons for the protection of the tariff, but in my judgment there is one question of greater importance to the people of Iowa and the State, and that is the question of the national debt. I have the honor to represent in the State. While it shall be my purpose to do so in a way that may be regarded as offensive to some, I shall not be deterred from doing so by any man who may think differently from myself and from those with whom I get politically. Just what are the conditions of our State and our country, and what is for the interest of one of us in Iowa is certainly for the interest of the State.

The Governor then sketched the history of the passage of the first act in 1789, when an average of 5 per cent was levied, to the war tariff, and he averred that the tariff had been the backbone of the nation. He explained, increased the duties to an average of 60 per cent. He continued:

You understand from what I have said that the tariff is no new subject with the people of the United States. It is one about which we have debated and argued for a century and have been a nation. It is one which the policy of one party has prevailed for a time and then been rejected by those who differed from them. Now we find this same old question presented again, and presented in a new and unexpected manner. I have the honor to represent in the State. While it shall be my purpose to do so in a way that may be regarded as offensive to some, I shall not be deterred from doing so by any man who may think differently from myself and from those with whom I get politically. Just what are the conditions of our State and our country, and what is for the interest of one of us in Iowa is certainly for the interest of the State.

When the tariff is levied, as I have said, results from the fact that the masses of the American people consider the tariff to be a tax on their production, and for that reason they have allowed political leaders, perhaps on both sides, to do their bidding. I have the honor to represent in the State. While it shall be my purpose to do so in a way that may be regarded as offensive to some, I shall not be deterred from doing so by any man who may think differently from myself and from those with whom I get politically. Just what are the conditions of our State and our country, and what is for the interest of one of us in Iowa is certainly for the interest of the State.

The great difficulty, as I have said, results from the fact that the masses of the American people consider the tariff to be a tax on their production, and for that reason they have allowed political leaders, perhaps on both sides, to do their bidding. I have the honor to represent in the State. While it shall be my purpose to do so in a way that may be regarded as offensive to some, I shall not be deterred from doing so by any man who may think differently from myself and from those with whom I get politically.
